To Muriel

By Her Mother, Lillian Selber

I looked upon a mystic sight,
It seemed but yesterday,
A kindly angel came by night,
And left a babe for me.
Her eyes were clear, her voice was low,
Her lips had wistful charm,
Her cheeks were soft as fleecy snow.
She's still the same; there's none of guile
Though Muriel's fourteen now;
There's eagerness in her ready smile,
Complacent grace in her air,

There's hope in her lovely gentle face,
And joy in her quickened step,
Enough to spread to every place.
